

Executive Fly-Fishing Day

AT THE DUKE OF NORTHUMBERLAND'S PRIVATE LAKE IN ALBURY

You are invited to join the Kids for Kids Executive Fly-Fishing Day on 12th October in Surrey, and help them transform the lives of children in Darfur. Sudan is a country that is in turmoil with shortages of even the most basic essentials.

The Fishing Day is at Park Lake, Albury, the private lake owned by the Duke of Northumberland. This is a really special day loved by experienced fishermen who get a chance to fish on this special lake and it is also a chance for total beginners to have a go too. You will be taught by fully qualified fly-fishing instructors who will show you how to cast a fly to catch that prince of fish, the wonderful trout! For those who have fished before, this is a chance to improve your technique with their help. Taking home a fish, eaten fresh from the water, is like no other and you will know that it has lived well, not in overcrowded waters fed hormones to keep it healthy.

Tackle is provided and children aged 10 and over are welcome. They will have to pay full price as numbers are strictly limited to ensure there is ample space for each fisherman to enjoy the peace and wildlife of this hidden lake. Children need to be accompanied by a paying adult.

Thanks to kind sponsors, all funds raised from ticket sales will go directly to the projects in Darfur. The poorest families survive on less than £25 a year and with inflation soaring, starvation is a real threat. The future is a bleak prospect for a mother who worries every day about how she will feed her little ones. Kids for Kids adopts a village, introducing an integrated package of sustainable grassroots projects identified by the villagers
